

In my opinion both the candidates each have at least three things to do during the debate.

Mrs. Clinton while having a good rhetoric needs to do:

1. Keep her cool. Clinton needs to be able to take on Trump's words and actions and not appear to be phased by them.
  - a. She more or less did, Smiles and amusement at Trump throughout. However there was the puppet moment. So this only worked slightly.
2. Explain her actions for the sexual assault charges held against Mr. Clinton. Clinton must allow an acknowledgement of them, she must be able to take the claims and make them work in her favor. Whether it's by showcasing the claims against Trump or not, she somehow needs to be able to move and keep the discussion away from them.
  - a. Discussion did not really go there so, nothing to report. But did Speak on the claims against Trump so It worked.
3. Truly she needs to appeal and explain that she wants to the president for the Trump supporters too. I mean she called them deplorable, this is a good chance for her to promote a message of inclusion. It also allows for her to sort of push at those that would call the election rigged. By using a message of inclusion she'll be able to obstruct the opposition she no doubt faces if/when she reaches the White House.
  - a. Open discussion on Gun Safety: Clinton responds because of Toddlers, Not in conflict with sensible regulation, understands that NRA supports Trump. Wants people to come together for Gun safety
  - b. Reaching out to all americans. Need everyone to make the economy, need every one, your talents, your skills, your ambitions.

Overall Clinton did alright, most are claiming she won the debate. I think she kept her cool and allowed was attempting to remind people that she wants to be president for everyone not just her followers and supporters.

Mr. Trump has a good deal he could be doing to sway people to his side and affirm his support base.

1. Talk about the economy → Issue Ownership, would allow for a good rhetoric on change.
  - a. Don't want 4 more years of Obama that's her → Closing statements
2. Talk about Obamacare → Would allow for a good rhetoric of change that is always popular. Will get people fired up too.

- a. Repeal and Replace → Exactly what he needed to say 9:31pm
- 3. Don't talk about Bill Clinton's affairs It opens the door for Clinton to talk about Trump's accusers
  - a. He actually did this which is good
- 4. This may be obvious but don't get baited by Clinton. Trump cannot afford another week of some distracting-yet-politically-problematic ghost from his past that Clinton might dredge up.
  - a. I guess We will see the outcome. There are quite a few things that the world can run with.

Overall Trump did alright for what is expected of him. However I believe he hurt himself further with his Bad Ombres (he meant Hombres) comment as well as his habit of speaking when he wants not when he is supposed to. Though he did manage to keep himself in check more, I do not know if it was enough. The whole not agreeing to accept the results will dominate the headlines.
